hackneyed sayed though it has proved to be better than the dependable "prospector's hunch" or judgment for that matter recently in Kelsey district. Two well-known "occasionals" had been celebrating in wet goods for a week or ten days when one awoke finding both food and money gone, shook the other to state that they must go prospecting or else he would leave for other parts—half awake, number two mumbled his objections to such strenuous efforts, but added that number one go down to the shaft which was full of water, stand there and throw the pick just as far as number one could and start digging where the pick landed. Knowing nothing about prospecting, he did as directed, by noon he went home with a large coffee can full of specimen rock, needless to say number two shook off the dregs of the recent spree which the sight of glittering quartz thoroughly eliminated. By night they had pounded out $300, of the precious stuff. Things are very quiet and business like around the property, no one getting any information since, but we know the ground is in close proxmity to the Kelsey mine.

NEW YORK, (LP) - The art of the dance will be portrayed in international tones on what is perhaps an unprecedented scale when Dance International makes its bow at Rockefeller Center here.

Some 40 nations will take part in the 35-day exhibition which is designed to show not only ballet and other dance forms themselves but the related arts as well. Painting, sculpture, costuming, photography, literature, and cinema will be used to depict the status of the dance in the 20th century.

The most beautiful course in the world, it is so much a part of nature that there is said to be a difference of opinion as to who owns it-the some 75 or 80 members or the animals and birds and the ocean.

My guess is that the birds and beasts hold the upper hand at the moment, because when I played it I did not see a member, but I did see enough wild life to equip a very respectable zoo. On the tee of the second hole I asked my caddy to show me the line and I got this amazing answer:

"See that elk down there? Well, play well to the right of him, but not as far over as that pelican is perched."

The elk didn't seem to mind when I approached him to play my second shot, I will admit, however, that he bothered me a trifle. He was the first elk with a body I had ever seen. I had seen plenty of elk's heads hanging on walls, but here was one with feet, stomach, and a set of questioning eyes. I asked the caddy if elk were plentiful on the course.

"We had so many that the board of directors shipped 'em away to a zoo. As one of the members remarked 'This is supposed to be a golf club not an

War's Grim Business Raises Its Price

COST OF WAR GOES UP — Nations of the world still debt-burdened from the last conflict are finding that the price of war has gone up. Cost of the World War has been added up to $340,-069,000,000. Cost of a new war would far surpass that amount, with new construction and high cost of materials responsible. Army bombers, for example, like the "flying fortresses" in center panel, cost $250,000 each and a squadron of 60 would release 100 tons of bombs daily, at $800 a ton. A naval torpedo, upper left, costs $12,500. Every round fired from a big gun, like the mobile weapon at upper right or the anti-aircraft gun at like the mobile weapon at upper right or the anti-aircraft gun at left center, costs about $10, while a 14-inch navy shell complete with detonating charge costs about $120. A combat division would fire away $330,000 daily.

Modern battleships, fully equipped, used to cost around $30,-000,000 each. Now the price has doubled. The new aircraft carrier Yorktown, lower right, recently launched at Norfolk, Va., cost $20,000,000. New items to be considered in an impending war would be tanks, lower left, and gas masks, not only for soldiers, as in right center, but for the civilian population as well. Tanks and civilians' gas masks were not used widely in the World War. Soldiers' wages have not risen much but their pay is but a small factor in the scope of modern warfare.

"Anthony and Cleopatra" was badly read by most of its players. In anticipation Tallulah would seem to be the most likely candidate for the role of the siren of the Nile and it is true that she was not without her moments but the sum total of her ineffective ones and those of the rest of the cast was a bad production. Her newly acquired husband, John Emery, and Conway Tearle were in leading roles.

Ellswyth Thane's "Young Mr. Disraeli" is an unimportant, inchote drama built about her subject's most unimportant, inchoate years. It is more a novel, or at least a series of dovetail episodes, than it is a play. It is literary, finely wrought, handsomely mounted, and for the most part admirably playat it delineates no conflict in character, sets up no clash of forces and worst of all never excites your interest.

The early years of England's great Jew who confounded his host of enemiss by becoming prime minister were hardly extraordinary and certainly not of the stuff of good theatre.

Miss Thane, who is none other than Mrs. William Beebe, has concerned herself with these years-Disraeli's gambling debts, his resentment of the critics who flayed his first book, hie early amours, and his debut into politics. But at the turning point of her hero's career, she drops him behind a third
